Simonidy's early work was influenced by the Impressionists and the Symbolists. However, he soon developed his own unique style, which combined elements of both movements with traditional Romanian folk art.

One of the most striking features of Simonidy's work is its use of color. His paintings are filled with rich, vibrant hues that create a sense of joy and optimism. Simonidy also used color to create a sense of movement and depth in his paintings.

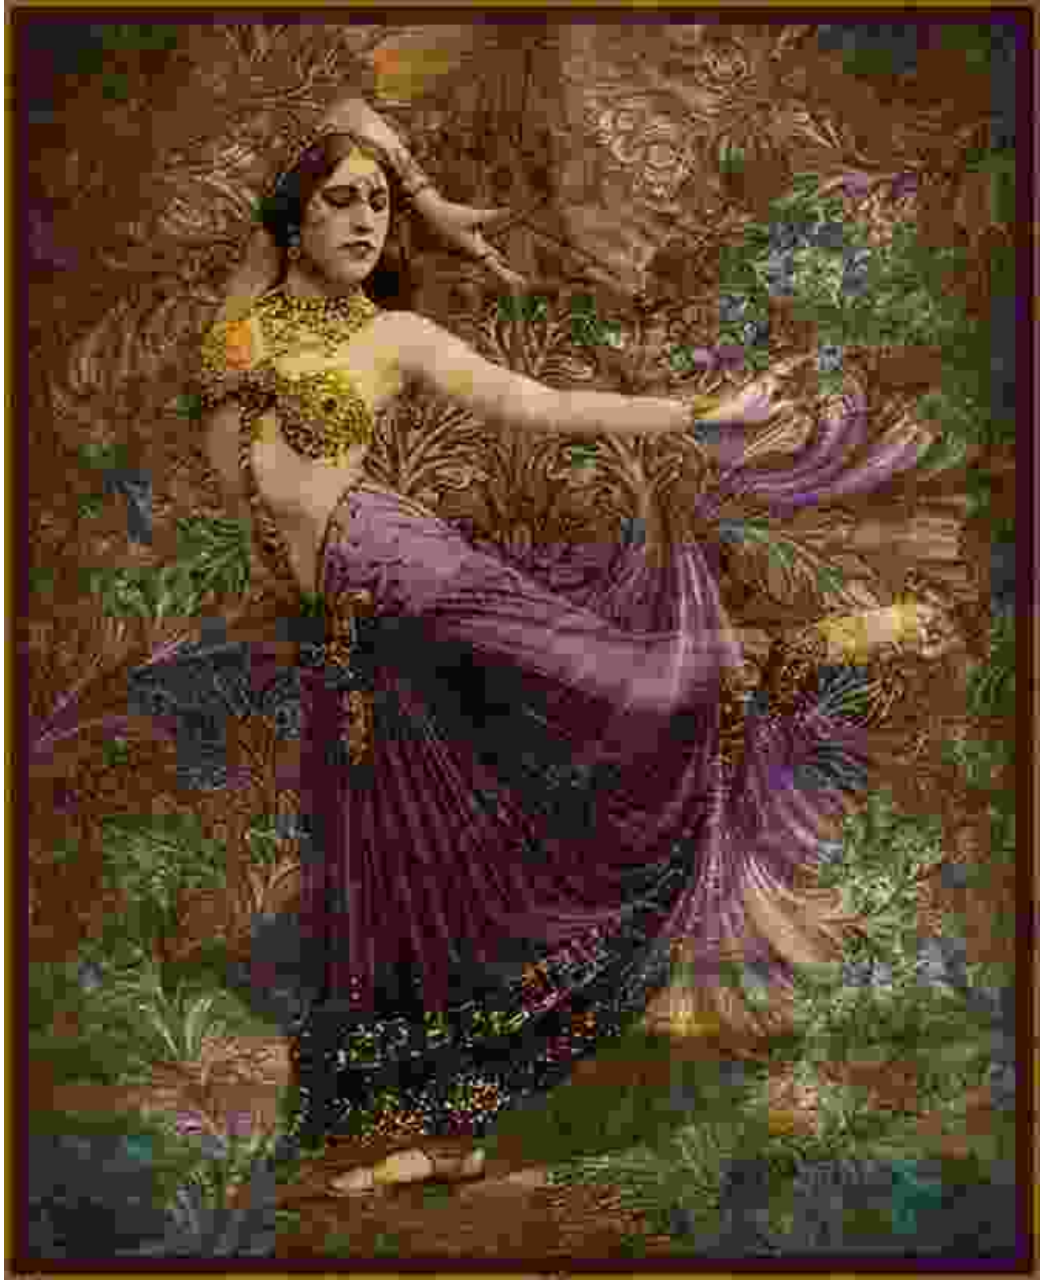

Another distinctive feature of Simonidy's work is its use of decorative patterns. He often incorporated traditional Romanian folk motifs into his paintings, such as floral patterns and geometric designs. These patterns add a sense of richness and texture to his work.

Simonidy's paintings often depict scenes of Romanian life, such as peasants working in the fields or women dancing at weddings. He also painted portraits of Romanian peasants and intellectuals.
