Plot

The film opens with a therapist named Anya (Natalie Dormer) driving home from work. She is tired and distracted, and she is not paying attention to the road. She swerves to avoid hitting a deer, and her car crashes into a tree.

Anya is seriously injured in the accident, and she is taken to the hospital. She wakes up to find that a young boy has died in the accident. Anya is devastated by the boy's death, and she feels responsible for his death.

Anya begins to experience guilt and grief, and she begins to have strange and disturbing visions. She sees the boy's ghost, and she hears him calling her name. Anya is unable to sleep or eat, and she begins to lose her grip on reality.

Anya's friends and family become worried about her, and they try to help her. However, Anya is unable to cope with her guilt and grief, and she continues to spiral downward.

One day, Anya has a vision in which she sees the boy's ghost standing in front of her. The boy tells Anya that she is not responsible for his death, and that he forgives her. Anya is comforted by the vision, and she begins to heal from her guilt and grief.
